Dr. Jeffrey D. Yergler is on the faculty of Golden Gate University where he serves as professor of management and chair of the undergraduate management department teaching management, organizational behavior, and strategic leadership. He also teaches in the graduate psychology department focusing on leadership, management, and cross-cultural influences in the mental health field and within industrial organizational psychology. Prior to his appointment at Golden Gate, Jeffrey served on the faculty of Olympic College in Bremerton, Washington. He was lead faculty for the organizational leadership and resource management discipline and facilitated the college-wide leadership development program for faculty and administrators. Prior to his entrance into the academy Jeffrey served in associate and head-of-staff positions in large, sectarian non-profits for over twenty years where he specialized in leadership and team development and cross-cultural integration and education.

Jeffrey received his BS in psychology from Westmont College in Santa Barbara, his Masters of Divinity from Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, his Doctorate from Columbia Theological Seminary in Atlanta, and his Ph.D. in Leadership Studies from Gonzaga University in Spokane. In addition to his instructional responsibilities, Jeffrey is principle for his consulting firm where he provides leadership development, management consulting, diversity training, executive and crises coaching, and change management. In addition to writing book reviews, he carries on an active research agenda addressing such areas as leadership development, psychological trauma and involuntary job loss, leadership and economic austerity, and leadership styles in and around Silicon Valley.
